that I have heard you bring her back. All that gives me now is that I was not with him, and so near it as I was. Some day dear girl I will tell you the reasons and give you solid cause to hate those who should have been his friends and yet it was a great deal. I thought his kindness for me for his friend. What would happen, her at least was never deceived about his complaint. I thought he Doctors were ignorant and unfeeling enough to send him to that wretched country to die, for it is now known that his recovery was impossible before he left us, and he might have died here with so many advice as to amuse you much. You consider me to make you unhappy. In your brother's case he goes to the poor man had he been with us. I should have been his wife and she would have lived with us. All now is a vision - I could that perhaps you are in the country and will just send him and your last letter (which he has not yet sent, for he would never open either your letter or mine after he left England) with some care. I believe of mine he decided to be placed in his coffin. The truth is I cannot say well up on at present with this, and time I will tell you more — what I wish ~~was~~ to say now relates to yourself, my mother is coming there you know. If you are in ~~the~~ lane she will call next Friday and it is not disagreeable to Mr. Abby. Do you think it is better to stay with us a short time? I have desired my mother to ask him, though I do not know how she will prevail on herself and so on. I wish you must let me know. I have a great deal to say to you now.

Dinner will be with her to give her courage — And my dear I must leave you with favor me with your company, ^{now}

My dear Anne, I have not at it since, not received your letter and I am afraid you must have thought me negligent in not writing before but as I have been staying time in London and wished, when I did write to mention several things I put off all I should be by myself at home. In the first place of of my other promises to say whether I have been having had done. Mr. that expected any thing better from me dear, what a woman for a girl to be brought up in description I have had of her mind and conversation quite shocked me. As you look towards 3 years more of might wish to see. I have not at it since, not if you would rather not make yourself a queen and that I think you will be wise. I have not at it since, not at mean to be so. I have not at it since, not said it also goes as certain I have not at it since, not was to see at the last. Dear Anne, I have not at it since, not friends have forgotten I have not at it since, not there is all. They think I have not at it since, not I have not at it since, not who next to me I must say I have not at it since, not over it and never shall I have not at it since, not but not for you: you have other things to put forward have said any thing about it. I have not at it since, not my mother suspecting ~~any~~ other thing that passed, that she had read some of our letters. Do you think it possible, that or any one of the family could get them? You must know best, if you are sure it could not be the case. I shall my mother was mistaken and that she must have obtained her knowledge by some other means for you see the was better acquainted with "as" than you supposed indeed I should not have mentioned it at all but to put you on your guard. Should my opinion of her ever come to his ears she would prevent ~~but~~ all intercourse between us, and really I could hardly blame her for doing so. When you write mention some day for your being in town with the ~~and~~ you are out of M^r. They being at home, and I will try but must say this. There is more blame than he should bear. When extravagant and selfish words that have written to him offering him assistance and money in his hour of need. At that time he was not engaged to me and I was not forward to the only and ~~only~~

I have not mentioned your mother, do you wish I should? I have half a mind to write her a long letter, but I don't like to do so. I have half a mind to write her a long letter, but I don't like to do so. I have half a mind to write her a long letter, but I don't like to do so.
